np.dot, with the number of threads being determined by both a build-time option and an environment variable. As for the python 2.x version, the following command installs the NumPy package. This is sometimes unexpected for users; NumPy itself doesn't auto-parallelize any function calls. The OpenBLAS libraries are included in the wheel. For more detailed instructions, consult our Python and NumPy installation guide below.

conda if you use conda, you can install NumPy from the defaults or conda-forge channels:
Best practice, use an environment rather than install in the base env
conda create -n my-env
conda activate my-env
If you want to install from conda-forge
conda config --env -add channels conda-forge
The actual install command
conda install numpy
If you use pip, you can install NumPy with:
Also when using pip, it's good practice to use a virtual environment - see Reproducible Installs below for why, and this for details on using virtual environments.
Installing and managing packages in Python is complicated, there are a number of alternative solutions for most tasks. MKL is a separate package that will be installed in the user's environment when they install NumPy. In the conda-forge channel, NumPy is built against a dummy LAPACK package. On success, the following should be displayed on your console. It focuses on users of Python, NumPy, and the PyData (or numerical computing) stack on common operating systems and hardware.
